

Common Household Chemicals Linked to Human Disease in Landmark UN Study

Earth Day is April 22. It is a time of year, we all pause and consider how we might tread more lightly on the planet ... and to think about 1 or 2 changes we can make each year that over time has a significant impact on reducing, reusing ... and recycling our precious resources and protecting the environment...

Early on in the crusade to be more environmentally conscious, Shaklee Corporation lead the charge... with Dr Shaklee creating the very first natural biodegradable cleaner... Basic H ... made from corn and coconuts... and cleans great ... and is VERY economical.

Switching to Get Clean biodegradable cleaning products saves the average family at least $200/ year... and creates a much safer environment for our families and pets.

The following is an article reporting from the United Nations on the link between household cleaning products and human disease.

- The World Health Organization (WHO) recently released a joint report with the United Nations Environment Program (UNEP), titled: State of the Science of Endocrine Disrupting Chemicals (EDCs), which suggests a ban of endocrine disrupting chemicals may be needed to protect the health of future generations
- The joint study is the most comprehensive report on EDCs to date, highlighting a wide variety of health problems associated with exposure, including: non-descended testes, breast, prostate and thyroid cancer, nervous system defects, and ADD/ADHD
- Some of the most commonly used endocrine disrupters are Bisphenol-A (BPA), Bisphenol-S (BPS), PCB's, phthalates and agricultural pesticides
- Rather than compile an endless list of things to avoid, it's far easier to focus on what you should do to lead a healthy lifestyle with as minimal a chemical exposure as possible.

Where To Start

It's tough to address environmental issues that you don't have control over. It's better to focus most of your attention on your immediate environment, which you have more, if not full, control over. After all, what you put on, in, and keep around your body on a daily basis is going to have the greatest impact on your health.
